

S · SUPPORT

you are already an ecosystem

An encounter with the ninety percent of you that isn't you.

🕒 10 MINUTES

THE MESS

1. Sit with this for two minutes: the microorganisms living in and on your body currently outnumber your human cells roughly ten to one. You are not a solo entity moving through an environment. You are a mess hall — an ecosystem of lives, constantly living and dying together.
2. Think of a situation you're currently navigating — something you'd describe as "what I need to figure out." List everything non-human that is actually part of this situation, even if it doesn't count as a variable in your normal framing.
3. Ask: whose interests does my version of this situation assume? Who or what gets left out when I call this my problem?

Notice: how much of what you call your thinking is happening through and with others.

NO OUTCOME REQUIRED.