just this

An encounter with doing one thing without rating it.

🕒 10 MINUTES

THE MESS

1. Choose something small you enjoy — or used to enjoy — that you can do right now. It doesn't have to be special. Take a short walk, listen to one song, or make something simple to eat.
2. While you're doing it, notice the moment you start evaluating — whether it's good enough, whether you're enjoying it enough, whether it's living up to what you wanted. When that thought arrives, don't follow it. Return to the physical experience: what you can see, hear, or feel right now.
3. When the time is up, write one sentence about what the experience was actually like — not whether it was good.

Notice: how many times the evaluating thought arrived, and how quickly it came.

NO OUTCOME REQUIRED.
