

M · MONITOR

the running check

An encounter with the moment you stepped out of something good.

🕒 10 MINUTES

THE MESS

1. Think of a recent experience that should have felt good — a meal, a conversation, a moment off, a small win. Something where the conditions were right. Write it down in a sentence.
2. Try to remember what was actually going through your mind during it. Not what you felt — what you were thinking. Were you rating it? Comparing it to something? Wondering if you were enjoying it enough?
3. Write down the thought that was running in the background. You don't have to judge it. Just name it.

Notice: whether the background thought showed up before the moment ended or while it was still happening.

NO OUTCOME REQUIRED.
