what was actually there

An encounter with an experience you may have partially missed.

🕒 15 MINUTES

THE MESS

1. Think of a time when something good was happening but part of you was watching and grading instead of being there. Write down what the situation was.
2. Set the evaluation aside for a moment. Write down what was actually present in that experience — the specific details of it, the parts that were genuinely good, the things you would have noticed more if you hadn't been assessing.
3. Write one sentence about what was there that you didn't quite let yourself have.

Notice: whether this feels like loss or like something that's still available to you.

NO OUTCOME REQUIRED.
