An encounter with a different starting point.

THE MESS

1. Take a problem you've been working on without much progress. Write down what you've been trying to fix.
2. Ask yourself: what if the problem starts earlier than I think? Or later? Or somewhere I haven't been looking? Pick one and write a new version of the problem from that new starting point.
3. Compare the two versions. What becomes possible in the second one that wasn't in the first?

Notice: what the second version opens up that the first one didn't.

NO OUTCOME REQUIRED.
