someone else's line

An encounter with a different view of where the problem lives.

🕒 15 MINUTES

THE MESS

1. Think of a situation where you and someone else are stuck — at home, at work, anywhere. You both care about it, but you're not getting anywhere together.
2. Ask them one question: "Where does this start for you?" In person, by message, however works. Listen without explaining your own view.
3. Notice whether they're describing the same problem or a different one. You don't need to agree. Just take in what they're seeing.

Notice: when two people draw a problem differently, they're often not disagreeing about facts — they're starting from different places.

NO OUTCOME REQUIRED.
