

S · SURRENDER

two versions at once

An encounter with sitting in the gap.

🕒 10 MINUTES

THE MESS

1. Think of a situation where you and someone else each seem to be describing a different problem — even though you're talking about the same thing. Write down both versions: how you see it, and how they seem to see it.
2. Sit with the fact that both might be true — or that neither fully captures what's actually happening. Don't try to merge them or decide who's right.
3. Notice what it feels like to hold two definitions of the same situation at once, without resolving them.

Notice: the discomfort here is useful. It means you're taking both versions seriously.

NO OUTCOME REQUIRED.
