An encounter with someone else's complicated feeling.

🕒 15 MINUTES

THE MESS

1. Think of someone carrying something complicated right now — not clearly happy or sad, or changing from one day to the next. Write down the single word you'd normally use to describe what they're going through.
2. Now write three to four sentences about what doesn't fit that word. The parts that are harder to see, or that seem to contradict the simple version.
3. The next time you're with them, try asking about one of those parts — not to fix it, just to acknowledge it's there.

Notice: whether they seem surprised that you noticed the harder-to-name part.

NO OUTCOME REQUIRED.
