what the combination tells you

An encounter with what two feelings together reveal that neither one alone would.

🕒 15 MINUTES

THE MESS

1. Think of a time when you felt two things at once — proud and embarrassed, relieved and sad, grateful and resentful. Pick one specific moment.
2. Write about each feeling separately: two to three sentences each. What was the proud part actually about? What was the embarrassed part about? Don't try to reconcile them.
3. Read both back. Notice whether the combination points to something that a single label would have missed entirely.

Notice: what the contradiction was protecting or pointing toward.

NO OUTCOME REQUIRED.
