

S · SURRENDER

the low you didn't mention

An encounter with how you actually felt after something ended, now that some time has passed.

🕒 10 MINUTES

THE MESS

1. Think of something that ended with a sense of accomplishment or relief — a project, a goal reached, a long effort finally done. Write down how you described it at the time. What did you tell people?
2. Now write what you didn't report. The low that arrived after. The restlessness. The sense that something had been lost in the push to the finish. You don't have to have felt all of these. Write whatever is true.
3. Sit with both versions. You do not need to correct the first one. Just let the second one exist alongside it.

Notice: whether naming the unreported part feels like relief, or like disloyalty to the version you told at the time.

NO OUTCOME REQUIRED.