An encounter with what retrospect makes possible that the moment itself didn't.

THE MESS

1. Think of something you went through that, at the time, felt primarily like pressure, uncertainty, or just getting through it. Not the hardest thing you've ever faced — just something demanding that is now behind you. Write one sentence about what it felt like from inside it.
2. Write two to three things you understand about that period now that you couldn't have articulated then. Not lessons. Just things that are clearer from here — why something happened, what you were actually carrying, what you were quietly learning without knowing it.
3. Read what you wrote and ask: does any of this apply to something you're in right now?

Notice: whether the hindsight feels like wisdom, or just like knowing how the story ended.

NO OUTCOME REQUIRED.
