managers do not solve problems

An encounter with something you are still trying to solve that is actually a mess — a dynamic system of interacting problems with no single right answer.

🕒 10 MINUTES

THE MESS

1. Name something you have been trying to solve — a recurring problem, a persistent conflict, a situation that keeps returning no matter what you do.
2. Map the other problems it is connected to. Write at least three. Follow the connections outward.
3. Look at what you've written and ask: is this a problem with a solution, or a system I have been living inside?

Notice: what changes when you stop calling it a problem.

NO OUTCOME REQUIRED.
