

Y · YIELD

we experience messes

An encounter with what the unabstracted, lived experience of a recent mess taught you that your analysis of it couldn't.

🕒 10 MINUTES

THE MESS

1. Think of a recent mess — not what it cost you or what you learned from it, but what it felt like from the inside while it was happening.
2. Write two or three things only that lived experience could have taught you — things your retrospective analysis of the same events couldn't have surfaced.
3. Don't extract lessons. Just describe what being inside the mess made visible.

Notice: whether the experience and the analysis are even describing the same event.

NO OUTCOME REQUIRED.