the good enough move

An encounter with action that doesn't wait for certainty.

THE MESS

1. Simon lived by one mantra: "The best is the enemy of the good." He wore one brand of socks, owned one black beret, ate the same breakfast every morning, and lived in the same house for 46 years. He wasn't being eccentric. He was protecting his attention for the work that mattered. Name one recurring decision in your life that is consuming more attention than it deserves.
2. Decide it now. In one sentence. For the next 30 days.
3. Write down what that decision has been costing you — in time, energy, or mental space.

Notice: what becomes available when one small decision is already made.

NO OUTCOME REQUIRED.
