

M · MONITOR

how you actually decide

An encounter with your own tendencies as a decision-maker.

🕒 10 MINUTES

THE MESS

1. Think about a significant decision you made in the last year — a job, a relationship, a purchase, a path. Write down how you made it. Did you consider a few options and choose, or did you keep searching for something better?
2. Simon observed that humans cannot evaluate every available option — there are too many, our information is incomplete, and our minds aren't built to weigh them all. So we satisfice: we consider a limited set of options, choose one that is good enough, and move on. Write one honest sentence about whether you satisfice or maximize in this area of your life.
3. Name one area where you satisfice well. Name one where you can't seem to stop searching.

Notice: whether your searching is serving you — or haunting you.

NO OUTCOME REQUIRED.
