what your constraints are protecting

An encounter with the possibility that your limits are doing something useful.

THE MESS

1. Simon's daughter Katherine said her father "simplified his life in terms of his daily habits, thus eliminating the need to make little decisions about everything." That simplification freed his attention for the people and work that actually mattered to him. Name one real constraint in your life right now — time, energy, money, capacity.
2. Ask: what does this constraint force you to prioritize? What gets your full attention because of it, not in spite of it?
3. Sit with this question: if this constraint disappeared tomorrow, what would you risk losing focus on?

Notice: whether the constraint is only a problem — or also a structure.

NO OUTCOME REQUIRED.
