

M · MONITOR

coming back to yourself

An encounter with the emotional territory you thought you had already left behind.

🕒 15 MINUTES

THE MESS

1. Name one feeling or pattern that has reappeared in your life recently — something you thought you had dealt with. Write it down without judging whether it should still be here.
2. Consider when you first encountered this feeling or pattern. Write one sentence about what was happening then. Don't look for causes. Just place it in time.
3. Ask yourself: what do you know now that you didn't know the last time you were here? Write two or three things that are genuinely different about you, even if the feeling isn't.

Notice: whether the return feels like failure or like evidence.

NO OUTCOME REQUIRED.